CURRENT PROJECTS

- "Coalition Politics and Foreign Policy" (development of book-length manuscript and various research projects on this topic).

This project investigates both the effectiveness of policymaking in multiparty cabinets and the types of foreign policies chosen by coalitions through quantitative multi-national statistical analyses and qualitative comparative case studies of three countries – Japan, the Netherlands, and Turkey. The book will offer a solid analytical framework based on multi-methodological work and move research beyond the conflicting assumptions and mixed results that characterize the current understanding of coalition decision making in international politics.
